

[Details of People Cleared from Orinsay in 1843]

The following list of all the families who lived in Orinsay when the people were cleared from there is based on the 1841 census returns which were taken two years before the township was cleared. The list also sets out the location to which the various families went after they were evicted from Orinsay. Fourteen families went to Crossbost, which was previously a Tack, 3 families went to Leurbost, 2 families went to Steimreway and one family each to Grimshader and Sandwich, and one family emigrated. There were about half a dozen senior citizen households who probably went with their relatives. There were a total of about 145 people in Orinsay when it was cleared.

Originally there were only 27 crofts in Crossbost and the 14 families evicted from Orinsay first tenanted the following 12 crofts in 1843. The crofts were crofts 4 & 5 (two families), 6, 8 & 13 (two families), 15, 16, 19, 21, 22, 24 and 25. Families fleeing from the Lemreway clearance in 1843 occupied the following Crossbost crofts: 1, 2, 3, 7, 9, 10, 11, (2 two families on each croft), 14, 17, 18, 20, 23, 26 and 27.

The eldest daughter of the above family was already married about 5 years before Orinsay was cleared, as follows:

Effie	1816	married to Roderick Campbell, 28 Lemreway (‘Ruaraidh Aonghais ic Ruaraidh’) whose father settled at 11 Marvig

Domhnuill Mac Thormoid was said to have come from the Isle of Scarp off the west coast of Harris and his home in Orinsay was on the site of the present Angus MacMillan's house at 2 Orinsay, ‘Tigh-a-Mhate’. He was reputed to have been an unusually strong person. On one occasion the Stewart brothers of Park Sheep Farm, ‘Gilleann Ruadh na Pairc’, who were universally acknowledged to be very cruel and wild men, invited Donald to meet them at Buthinish across on the south side of Loch Shell. Donald set off in a rowing boat across Loch Shell with a companion, but on arrival at the other side there was no sign of the Stewart brothers. Although Donald knew very well that the Stewart brother's purpose in inviting him was to set about him, as was their custom to rough handle anyone whenever they got an opportunity, nevertheless he set off confidently alone to visit friends in their house nearby, leaving his companion in the boat. As he was climbing up from the shore to his friend's house he saw the Stewart brothers coming out and one of them came forward to meet him. On coming abreast Mr. Stewart offered his hand and without exchanging a word of greeting Donald grasped his hand and pressed it so hard that he forced the blood out of Mr. Stewart's fingernails. When he released his hand Mr. Stewart turned away without a word with his hand under his arm. Donald turned and walked quietly down to his boat, having made his point without uttering a word.

It is significant that Donald Macleod emigrated when Orinsay was cleared in 1843. He was probably a marked man and he could not escape the tentacles of the Lewis estate employees. Probably the estate refused to give him a place to live in within Lewis. That was usually the price a crofter had to pay if he was not submissive. Doubtless the Stewart brothers had the last word as usual.

We first heard the above story in our village ceilidh house, but recently an elderly man from Lemreway related it to us and identified the subject.

In addition to the families already listed as being in Orinsay when the township was cleared in 1843, there were the following people some of whom we have not identified:
